

LEADERSHIP IN A CRISIS

by Jaason Geerts, PhD, LEADS Canada

We are in this together!

Understand that it is a VUCA situation (Volatile, Uncertain, Complex, Ambiguous), which influences all other steps. General John Galvin, former Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, once said: "You will never have all the information that you would like to have. It is your job to gather enough information together and then to make a decision".

Instill CONFIDENCE in:

- the reliable information
- the strategy, despite expected setbacks,
- the team and its members, and
- the end goal - we will get through this together

Provide clear DELEGATION of, and identify LEADS for, key tasks.

Identify PRIORITIES, in sequence, and make and communicate CLEAR DECISIONS based on the best available information, including from experts.

Welcome questions and EQUIP team members with the RESOURCES they need. Implementation and alignment can take time.

Determine the best STRATEGY, based on stakeholder input, which includes experts and those tasked with executing the strategy. The strategy should clearly identify first and next steps, knowing that things can change suddenly, which requires adaptive leadership. This can involve new collaborations. Two relevant military terms are: "prior preparation and planning prevent poor performance" and "simplicity, flexibility, and concurrent activity".

ENABLE people to act without unnecessary restrictions and TRUST them to make decisions, in line with the priorities, reliable information, and strategy.

Show EMPATHY and CARE for others, which involves VISITING (in-person or virtually), checking in, VALUING their work, and keeping MORALE up.

COMMUNICATE regularly and be TRANSPARENT and AUTHENTIC about:

- the nature of VUCA, including being unsure about future details
- the most recent reliable information (to filter through all the "noise" and rumours)
- the operational priorities
- the strategy, which is evolving.

Ensure that there is a viable PACE, except in short bursts, and R&R – prolonged high tension is not healthy or sustainable. This includes rest breaks, time to switch off, schedule shifting, nutrition, humour, stress counseling, and non-work needs of staff (such as time to connect with their families). This also involves leader SELF-CARE.

"In times of struggle, leaders must lift their inner and outer spirits and find HOPE."

Elder Little Brown Bear, Ernest W. Matton
